Recommendation for a Safe Waterfront

The Lake at Camp McCumber is one of its most alluring and desirable locations. These recommendations will help your camp be safe, very safe.

1. Your group should have two certified water safety instructors or life guards: one for swimmers and one for boating use.

The swim life guard should have another adult working as spotter. Keep swimmers within the marked swimming area. Two sets of eyes looking in both directions at all times. Become familiar with the rescue hook, throw ring, and other rescue equipment kept in the Oar House. Return these to storage at the end of day so that they don't disappear during the night.

2. The boating life guard should have another adult working as a spotter. Life guard and spotter should be out in the life guard row boat when boats are on the lake. Two sets of eyes looking in both directions at all times. Make sure that the throw ring with rope is in the boat when on the lake. Keep your boat in close proximity to the group of canoes, row boats, or paddle boats: i.e., on the same end of the lake.

Become familiar with the rescue hook, throw ring, and other rescue equipment kept in the Oar House. Return these to storage at the end of day so that they don't disappear during the night.

3. Consult with your insurance company upon making arrangements for your group's liability coverage. For your increased protection, add an aquatic rider to your coverage if they provide one. Follow any directions or guidelines that your Insurer provides in addition to the two recommendations above.
